Acting is the use of your own person as a creative instrument; with your voice, your heart, your mind, and your body, you can create characters and present theater that compels others to think, to feel, and even to take action. In these classes, we will examine the basic mechanics of theater, and explore how to use our own knowledge, perspective, and physical beings to present compelling work on stage.

Experienced performers are expected to test their range, refine their techniques, and rise to new challenges, but experience is not required! For the beginner or newcomer, these classes are an opportunity to build confidence, learn the basics, and to play, grow, and learn with your creative peers!
